Margaret Oglesby and Colonel Jacob Wark Griffith, known locally as "Roarin' Jake" Griffith, during the Civil War, non-professionals; e. University of Kentucky; div. Linda Avidson; m. Evelyn Marjorie Baldwin; hy. reading and music. As a boy, Griffith worked in the mail room of his brother's newspaper in a Kentucky town, wrote theatre notes and night police court reports for "Marse Henry" Watterson's Louisville Courier-Journal and witnessed his first theatrical performance, Pete Baker in "America's National Game." He also saw Julia Marlowe in "Romola" and promptly decided to become a dramatist; the desire was imparted to the manager of the Meffert Stock Company, then playing at the Masonic Temple in Louisville. He appeared on the stage for the first time in the role of a dunce (using the name of Lawrence Griffith) in "The District School." Then followed other roles and he remained with the Meffert Stock Company throughout its season at the Masonic Temple.

Then came regular periods of stock and road company assignments, first with John Griffith's Strolling Players, David Braytington being the name he adopted. He later began making moving pictures in Los Angeles, in which Mary and Jack Pickford, Henry B. Walthall and other Biograph players appeared.

Another phase of Griffith's early career was that of playwright and poet. While in Chicago in the fall of 1907, he attended his first picture show and was greatly impressed by the long lines waiting for admissions. Before he left Chicago he wrote a scenario, a screen version of the opera, "La Tosca." Acted in pictures "Ostler Joe," "When Knighthood Was in Flower" and other one-reelers. In 1908 became assistant director to H. M. Marvin, and is credited with developing the "flash-back," "close-up," "mist-photography," "fadeout" He was also one of the first directors to make pictures beyond the one-reel length. In 1913 he made "The Battle of the Sexes," following that with "The Avenging Conscience," a forerunner of all the current German art films, "Home Sweet Home" and "The Escape." "The Birth of a Nation," which is still being viewed throughout the world, followed these films. In 1916, "Intolerance" was released at the Liberty theatre, New York. During the war he made "Hearts of the World." Among the players he helped to develop were Mary Pickford, Dorothy and Lillian Gish, Blanche Sweet, Mae Marsh, Owen Moore, Henry B. Walthall, Alice Joyce, Lionel Barrymore, Jack and Lottie Pickford, Mabel Normand, James Kirkwood, Harry Carey, Mack Sennett, Mary Alden, Robert Harron, Richard Barthelmess and Constance Talmadge, who made her screen bow in "Intolerance." In 1919 D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks founded the United Artists Corporation and Griffith's first picture released through United Artists was "Broken Blossoms," in which Lillian Gish and Richard Barthelmess appeared. This was followed by "The Love Flower," "Way Down East," "Dream Street," "Orphans of the Storm," "One Exciting Night," "The White Rose," "America," "Isn't Life Wonderful" and "Sally of the Sawdust." He then did "That Royle Girl" and "The Sorrows of Satan" for Paramount. "Drums of Love," in which Mary Philbin and Don Alvarado appeared, was the first film made for United Artists by Griffith after an absence of three years, this being followed by "The Battle of the Sexes," the same story he made in 1913, this time with Phyllis Haver, Jean Hersholt, Belle Bennett and Don Alvarado. In "Lady of the Pavements" Lupe Velez sang. Griffith's "Abraham Lincoln" was his first venture in the all-talking field; "The Struggle" followed. Sold United Artists partnership, 1933. In 1936: "Broken Blossoms," Twickenham.

L. Ranlett of Marshall, Spader & Company, New York stock brokers. Real estate next claimed his interest and he connected with Dean Alvord and Company, whom he left to take the managerial reins of Woodmere Realty Company, thence to the real estate department of United States and Mexican Trust Company. The invaluable experiences which he gained here in organizing building and development companies was reflected in his subsequent ventures in the motion picture. After a brief period of experimentation with short films of strictly an educational nature, he launched a campaign to release short comedy and novelty pictures through a special national distribution organization. Unable to interest American capital, he appealed to the great Hudson's Bay Company in England, where he succeeded in getting the financial backing he was seeking. Several years ago Educational Pictures, Inc., was organized as a holding corporation for the Educational interests. In 1933, physical distribution and sales of Educational Films were turned over to Fox Film.

KENT, SIDNEY R.: President of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; b. Lincoln, Neb., and at 14, after he had finished grammar school, got his first job stoking boilers in a greenhouse at $5 a week. From this humble beginning he has developed a business career which is one of the most strikingly successful ones in the annals of the picture industry. Before he was 20 years old he had pushed up in Wyoming and was occupying a responsible position with Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. He was one of an engineering company and he and five other men were sole inhabitants of 36 miles of desolate country. They built their own roads and pipelines, established camps and literally opened up territory to civilization and business activity. In 1912 he went to the Pacific Coast with the American Druggists' Syndicate. Shortly afterwards he returned East where he became a salesman at $50 a week. Three months later he was the company's assistant sales manager, then assistant to the president and for three and one-half years he was virtually in charge of the entire business. A friend talked to him enthusiastically of the motion picture business. He liked its prospects and cast his lot with the films with the old Vitagraph Company. It was not long after that General Film Company was indicted under the Sherman Law and buried under judgments aggregating $25,000,000. Frank Hitchcock had the job of unravelling the tangle and he called Sidney Kent to help him. The job was cleaned up and Kent walked into the office of Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players, and sold his services, but not at a price. That was to be determined if and when he made good. He went to work in the company's administration bureau, and at the end of eight months was getting $250 a week. His first work, in the distribution department, was as special district manager of the territory which included the Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Des Moines offices, which position he held until May, 1919, when he was called to the home office to become general sales manager. On January 8, 1921, Zukor appointed him general manager of distribution and a year later he was elected to the company's board of directors. In 1926 he was named general manager. Was also vice-president. Resigned in January, 1932, to become Fox president. Largely instrumental in merging Fox Film Corp. with Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., in August, 1935 into Twentieth Century-Fox Corp., of which he is president.

Recha Stern of Flieden, Germany. Feb. 14, 1884 landed in New York. For short period worked in a drug store in New York, then a department store in Chicago, next on a farm in South Dakota; returned to Chicago and went to work for Butler Brothers; later was employed as a bookkeeper for the wholesale jewelry firm of L. Heller & Company; thereafter he worked for Mandel Bros., as assistant bookkeeper; then became a clerk in the stock yards for Nelson Morris & Company; also worked for the firm of Otto Young & Company, wholesale jewelers; thence to Oshkosh as bookkeeper in Continental Clothing house, and after four years was promoted to manager. Was naturalized in 1889.

Back to Chicago in 1906 and intended establishing a chain of 5 and 10 cent stores but became interested in moving picture theatres instead. Opened his first theatre, the Whitefront, on Milwaukee avenue, Chicago, February 24, 1906; two months later opened his second theatre on Halsted Street; then established Laemmle Film Service, Chicago; the next year (1907), he established exchanges in Evansville, Memphis and Omaha, and in June of that year returned to Europe for a visit. In 1908 he established exchanges in Minneapolis, Portland, Ore., Salt Lake City, Montreal and Winnipeg. In April, 1909, he quit the Patents Company and became an independent, organized Imp Company, incorporated as Yankee Films Company; released his first picture, "Hiawatha," 989 feet in length, the second release being "Love's Stratagem," 954 feet long.

From 1909 to 1912 he fought the Patents Company; and in May, 1912, Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane, Charles Bauman, David Horsley, P. A. Powers and W. H. Swanson combined their interests and formed Universal Film Manufacturing Company with offices at 1 Union square, New York City. Later that year Laemmle went to Europe and opened his first American independent foreign office. Laemmle and Cochrane bought out P. A. Powers and obtained control of Universal and in 1924 they moved to new quarters, Fifth avenue and 57th street; in 1925 Universal Pictures Corporation issued the first stock to the public and became established on the New York stock exchange. In June, 1926, Laemmle was stricken with appendicitis on board the S. S. Berengaria and operated upon in London. In December, 1926, he bought the Thomas H. Ince estate near Hollywood and became a resident of California.

On the anniversary of his sixtieth birthday he was honored by a great demonstration by all of Hollywood under the leadership of Mary Pickford and other celebrities of screen and stage who worked for him. "All Quiet on the Western Front," completed in 1930, was awarded every competitive prize offered in this country and abroad for the Best Picture of 1930. These awards included the gold statuette of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the Film Daily poll, the gold medal of the Faculty of Arts of London, and the Photoplay Magazine Gold Medal. In September, 1930, Laemmle became a grandfather and "Grand-daddy Carl" took the place of "Uncle Carl" as the industry's affectionate nickname for the veteran producer. Fitting observance was made in February, 1931, of his silver jubilee in the business, and a bound volume of letters received from exhibitors on the occasion was presented to him in Hollywood, the presentation being made by Martin Quigley and William A. Johnston. In connection with the silver jubilee, a biography of Carl Laemmle, by John Drinkwater, was published in England by Heinemann and in America by Putnam's. A handsomely bound volume of letters of congratulation compiled by Mr. Hays and presented by him before the producing heads of all the companies was the climax of this Silver Jubilee. On February 14, 1934, celebrated his fiftieth year in America, and on May 1, after a ten year occupancy of quarters in the Heckshер Bldg., moved to Rockefeller Center on March 15, 1935; celebrated 20th anniversary of the opening of Universal City. In March, 1936, resigned as president of Universal and sold interest in company to Standard.

His first theatrical venture was the operation of a small theatre in Haverhill, Mass. The house was in poor condition, but he renovated it and reopened it with "Life of the Christ." Having won the confidence of his patrons, he soon had the leading theatre in the town. He then decided to give social attractions such as the Boston Opera company, "Peter Pan," with Maude Adams and "The Littlest Rebel," with the Farnums as the attractions, which was also a huge success. One by one all of the five theatres in Haverhill came under Mayer's control. Later he branched out and with Nat Gordon formed the Gordon-Mayer theatrical chain, the strongest in New England at that time. He then became interested in the exchange end of the business, and soon was recognized as one of the biggest buyers of film production in the country, as well as enjoying an enviable reputation as a rare judge of a picture's commercial possibilities. His background of sound experience and victories made him logical head of operations when the greatest merger up to that time in film history brought together the picture-making forces of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Under his management that organization has become one of the greatest film producing organizations in the world, producing an average of more than 60 pictures each year.
